New Report Explores Why Adolescents Seek to Change the World and How Educators and Adults Can Support Them

Changes in their brains, combined with a greater awareness of peers and events around them, make adolescence a key time for students to figure out who they are, what they aspire to be, and what they want to do in the world, according to a new report from the Alliance for Excellent Education (All4Ed). The report, Science of Adolescent Learning: How Identity and Empowerment Influence Student Learning, explores the research explaining these changes and offers ways that educators and policymakers can support students during this critical time.

The Challenges and Privileges of Being a First-Generation College Student

This post was written by All4Ed intern Jenna Douglas. As a first-generation college student who transferred from a local community college, graduating from Georgetown University is my life's biggest accomplishment to date. Yet as I reflect on my educational journey, my heart is filled with dismay as much as it is with pride.

What States Should Put in their Career and Technical Education Plans

The new federal career and technical education (CTE) law, Perkins V, provides states and local communities with the opportunity to be creative in ensuring that all young people, particularly those from historically underserved groups, are considered in the implementation of the new law. Here's how states can focus on equity and quality as they develop...
School and District Leaders! Sign on to Support Wi-Fi in Schools

All4Ed invites school and district leaders to demonstrate support for funding to support Wi-Fi in schools by adding their name to a letter opposing the suggested actions of Federal Communications Commission to cap spending on critical funds and programs that promote digital equity. The deadline for signatures is 5:00 p.m. (ET), Thursday, August 22, 2019.

Ideas for Enhancing School Safety Against Targeted Violence

“School safety is about more than preventing shootings. It also encompasses issues such as student voice, educational support personnel, school discipline practices, positive social and emotional learning, and student privacy,” wrote All4Ed President and CEO Deb Delisle in a letter to the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee. Delisle's letter offered several ideas for the committee to consider as it held a hearing on enhancing school safety against targeted violence.

How Can Schools Support Adolescent Students?

Think back to your middle school experience. Do the words "awkward," "angsty," and "misunderstood," come to mind? It’s no wonder that adolescence is often considered a difficult and complicated age. But given that adolescents make up nearly one-fourth of the U.S. population, not understanding and serving the needs of young people in this stage of life is not an option.
